OREGON

Red Door Cellars is produced in Oregon, considered to be a cooler climate wine growing region, boasting long, gentle growing season. With warm summers, mild winters and long, often rainy springs, the Oregon climate is particularly well matched to the early ripening Pinot Noir grape.

The grapes in Oregon benefit from growing on a variety of hillside slopes and on a range of soils, created by volcanic activity and sedimentary rock. While Pinot Noir may be the most popular grape grown in Oregon – Pinot Gris has now staked its claim as the leading white varietal.

TASTING PROFILE

Fragrant notes of jasmine and grapefruit welcome you to this wonderful Oregon Pinot Gris. Grapefruit continues on the palate rounded out by flavors of fresh fig and cantaloupe. This bright wine finishes crisp with light integrated oak.

VINTAGE NOTE

The 2007 growing season showed that Oregon is a cool grape growing region. With sporadic days of rain and fewer high temperature days, a cool, even season resulted. This cooler growing season was great for Pinot, since they are cool climate grapes. Harvest began in late September and was finished by the end of October. The 2007 vintage wines show bright fruit, moderate alcohol levels and excellent acidity.
